Beauty of Sprouts Restaurant Review
433 N. Orange Ave., Sarasota, FL 34236

By Ellen Jaffee Jones

Even if you're in the Tampa area, trekking down to Sarasota is worth the drive to check out Beauty of Sprouts. After being closed for several months, Beauty of Sprouts reopened moving up the street on Orange Avenue to a larger, romantic and high-ceilinged setting. My partner and I spent a lovely vegan birthday there and Chef Rano, as she is known, is truly a one-woman band. She is the only employee...owner, chef, wait staff and dishwasher. It may take longer than some restaurants to get your order, but know it is made with love and mostly, though not all, raw ingredients. The menu says Chef Rano learned her craft from her father in Russia and won the highest awards there, as well as working at restaurants in New York City. The recipes are all vegan, organic, GMO, sugar, soy and gluten free. I ordered the Asian Mixed Veggies and Broth which had a tasty variety of vegetables with brown rice pasta, cilantro and scallions in a lemongrass broth. My partner loved the Quinoa Burger, which was on a sprouted quinoa bread (they tasted totally different), with nut cheese, a mixed salad with scallions, tomatoes, shallots, cover sprouts avocado and a lemon dressing. We caught a glimpse of the Quiche, which was a clever sunflower seed crust smothered with tomatoes, broccoli, carrots along with a mixed salad with basil dressing. The Kale Pizza was a crunchy sprouted buckwheat crust covered with nut cheese, zucchini hummus, peppers, tomatoes, kale avocado and a side salad. The desserts were divine...all raw and a hefty option of chocolate for us chocaholics.

Entrees range from $16.50-$17.50 and are competitive with other local vegan restaurants. Although you can easily fill up on less expensive appetizers, salads and soups. For those who think these may be a bit pricey, at a "mid-range" meat-based restaurant in Sarasota, 12 ounce ribeye is $32, and 8 ounce tenderloin is $34! Oh...did you want a salad with that? ;)

Currently, the restaurant is closed Sundays and Mondays, but in these changing times, be sure to check websites or call for details. The owner posted on Facebook most recently:

PREVENTING FUTURE PANDEMICS ACT

Submitted by Tom Bird

The following article appeared in the Winter 2020 issue of the Animal Welfare Institute [AWI] quarterly issue; p. 20. (www.awionline.org) It is with kind permission from AWI that the article is reprinted below. Connections between the wildlife trade and the development of pandemics are briefly explored here.

One of the stark realities COVID-19 has forced us to confront is the huge risk posed by zoonotic diseases—pathogens passed from nonhuman animals to humans. COVID is merely the latest and most devastating example of this type of disease. In the past 40 years, the worst pandemics and epidemics—including SARS, Ebola, HIV/AIDS, avian flu, swine flu, and Zika—have all originated in animals. We must reevaluate our treatment of animals and our relationship with the natural world in order to protect public health.

In September, Senators John Cornyn (R-TX) and Cory Booker (D-NJ) and Representatives Mike Quigley (D-IL) and Fred Upton (R-MI) introduced the Preventing Future Pandemics Act (HR 8433/S 4749). This bill would outlaw the import, export, and sale of live wildlife for human consumption in the United States. It would also provide support for efforts to help curb wildlife trade for human consumption abroad.

The United States is responsible for an estimated 20 percent of the global wildlife trade. Live wildlife markets, the primary focus of this bill, constitute just one segment of this multi-billion dollar trade, yet COVID-19 has taught us that they can have serious repercussions for public health. At such markets, wild animals such as civets and bats are crammed together near humans, creating an ideal scenario for the spillover of diseases to which we have no immunity. By exploiting animals and their habitats, we contribute to precipitous declines in biodiversity and come into more frequent contact with wildlife that carry novel and dangerous pathogens. AWI will continue advocating for the Preventing Future Pandemics Act to position the United States as a global leader in protecting both wildlife and public health.

Dog Chaining Legislation in Florida

By Renee Rivard

Over Half of Florida's Population and their Pets are Now Protected by Anti-Tethering Laws

Under Florida State law, a dog can be kept chained indefinitely as long as it has water and food. Without a state-wide dog chaining law, the public is not protected from chained dog attacks or attacks from dogs that have broken free from their chains. In the last ten years there have been over forty very serious chained dog attacks in Florida—four of them fatal—mostly involving children (and those are only the ones that have made it to the news). Chained dogs are not protected from strangling themselves, being stolen, attacked by other animals or cruel humans, and heat exhaustion—not to mention the lack of socialization and emotional distress chained dogs endure.

It is for these reasons that communities across Florida (and the United States) are implementing their own anti-tethering ordinances. Nineteen counties in Florida now ban unattended dog chaining—Miami/Dade, Palm Beach, Broward, Collier, Sarasota, Manatee, Hillsborough, Lake, Leon, Pasco, Duval, Pinellas, Lee, Hernando, Nassau, Monroe, Martin, St. Lucie, and Citrus.

What Do the Experts Say about Dog Chaining?

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, the American Veterinary Medical Association, the Centers for Disease Control, and the U.S. Postal Service all speak out against dog chaining. They cite that dog chaining is inhumane and can lead to dogs becoming territorial and aggressive. Law Enforcement Professionals agree that a well written dog chaining law is a tool that they can use to crack down on dog fighting.

There are Alternatives for EVERY Reason for Tethering a Dog

An anti-tethering ordinance is a reasonable law that encourages the humane treatment of animals. It does not affect the majority of pet owners—most have fences or walk their dogs. Those who chain will have to figure out an alternative to chaining (put up a fence, build a kennel, walk the dog, sit outside with the dog, or not get or keep a dog). Owning a pet involves responsibility and financial commitment. Education is key. Animal Services Directors in counties that ban unattended tethering say that it only takes about five minutes to educate an owner about the dangers of dog chaining and provide alternatives for them.

Goals and Recommended Legislation

There are TWO GOALS that should be kept in mind when considering an anti-tethering ordinance for your community.

1) Public Safety. A study by a division of the Centers for Disease Control found that tethered dogs are 2.8 times more likely to bite. The victims of these bites are often children. If left unattended, a chained dog can bite a child in a matter of moments. Senior citizens are the second victims of chained dog attacks—often dogs will break free from their chains and chase their victims. Postal workers are the third victims of attacks.

2) Protecting Dogs. An unattended chained dog can strangle itself, be stolen, or attacked by other animals or cruel humans in a matter of moments. With a ban on unattended dog tethering, there are not only less chained dog cases reported, but there are also less bite cases, less nuisance complaints (chained dogs tend to bark at night because they want to go indoors), and less heat exhaustion cases reported. This decreases animal control's workload and saves taxpayers money.

These goals apply to ALL communities (urban or rural). Demographics, which are typically an argument against anti-tethering legislation, has shown no relation to the success of an anti-tethering ordinance. Keep in mind that vague language can create loopholes in the ordinance for those who chain 24/7. Timed ordinances which allow unattended tethering have proven to be too difficult to enforce. It would require an animal control officer to physically be present to witness the duration of time that the dog is tied out. Timed ordinances also do not meet the two goals of protecting the public and the dog. Palm Beach County originally had a timed ordinance and changed it to an attended tethering ordinance when they found that the timed ordinance did not solve the problem. "The owner must be outside and in visual range of the tethered dog" is the tried-and-true wording that most communities are using.

Note: Renee has attended most of the recent delegate meetings to speak for the statewide legislation against chaining/tethering unattended dogs outside for all the above reasons. Betsy Coville, DVM has joined her at several of these and given strong testimonials supporting a statewide anti-tethering ban. Myriam Parham attended and spoke at the Pasco County meeting and Isabelle Tassi spoke at the Hillsborough County meeting.
Green Culture’s FRIENDS SOCIAL NIGHT

By Ann Chin

I recently discovered that Green Culture, the lauded new vegan eatery in Tarpon Springs hosts "socials" and "meetups"--get together for anyone who wants to meet others interested in plant-based cuisine. Some of the meetups also feature educational, plant-based films or speakers. I had been wanting to go to one of these events for months, in part because I love the food and desserts served at Green Culture, and was excited to have the opportunity last Monday to go to the "Friends Social", which is every second Monday of the month. The event was listed on their website (without the date listed) and on the "events" tab of the Facebook page (which has a perhaps more comprehensive list of the various socials than the website).

I wasn't disappointed. First, the food choices are organic, 100% plant-based and always amazing: coffees and fresh-made cold-press juices, sweet bowls, salads, burgers, subs and sandwiches, “Hot Dawgs”, tacos, Mex and "Hearty" Bowls, salads and a myriad of sweets, desserts and baked goods. (They even serve some light vegan drinks such as Stella Artois and a signature citrusy beer.). I ordered two of the desserts, the chocolate and pistachio donuts, which were delectable! I sat with a number of old friends, as well as some new ones, and was able to converse about a number of topics in which I am interested concerning the plant-based diet. This feeling of comradery among like-minded individuals is wonderful to experience! And when I wasn't listening to a new friend talking, I was able to enjoy the light and airy, casual eatery atmosphere (they also have a cute outdoor patio, but it was too wet for that), and view a documentary about animals and the plant-based diet that played in the background. Green Culture has interesting educational videos constantly playing on a large screen on the side wall.

Overall, I highly recommend checking out some or all of their meet-ups and socials, which you can find listed in the FVA newsletter, on the Green Culture Facebook page or eatgreenculture.com. I know I will be checking out more of them!

Zesty Italian Roasted Root Vegetables with Tomatoes and Kale (No Oil)
By Kimberly Gronemeyer
Serves: 6-8 for a side dish; 3-4 as a main course

3 to 4 pounds of mixed root vegetables such as carrots, potatoes, and turnips, peeled and cut into a medium size dice
3 cloves of garlic, minced
1 small white or yellow onion, diced small
1 heaping tablespoon tomato paste
1 28-ounce can of whole peeled tomatoes
3 cups (packed) of chopped fresh kale
2 teaspoons Italian seasoning
Salt (optional)
Black pepper to taste
Hot sauce (optional)

1. Preheat oven to 450°F. Place the chopped root vegetables on a sheet pan with a silicone mat. Make sure the vegetable pieces are spread out and not touching. You might want to use two pans as they need space to brown without using oil. Sprinkle the vegetables with a tiny bit of salt if using. Roast for about 30-40 minutes, flipping halfway through cooking. Cook until brown on the edges and easily pierced with a fork.
2. While the vegetables are roasting, heat a large sauté pan to medium heat. Add the onions and a pinch of salt (if using) and stir frequently until the onions begin to brown. If they start to stick, sprinkle a dash of water into the pan. Use just enough water so that the onions do not stick. You don’t want them simmering in water! Once they are soft and start to brown, add the garlic and continue to stir a couple minutes until the garlic begins to brown too. Stir in the tomato paste and cook for another minute. Pour the liquid from the can of tomatoes into the pot. Then cut or tear the tomatoes with your hands into large chunks and add those tomato pieces to the pan as well. Add the Italian seasoning and black pepper. Stir well. Cover and let simmer on low heat until the vegetables are done roasting. Stir in the vegetables and kale. Cook until the kale is just wilted, about 5 minutes.
Season with salt and pepper to taste. Add a little hot sauce if you like some heat! Serve hot.
